How To Capture the best photos with Mac OS X Leopard When you go for a vacation, you definitely want the best quality photos you can take. Here are some tips to help you take the best photos with your camera. Camera Settings In order to achieve the best photos, you should set up some camera settings: Shutter speed: By simply moving your camera's focus ring, you will be able to control how quickly the shutter closes. Adjust the shutter speed until you achieve the perfect exposure, and the light scene. You should use your camera's highest available shutter speed - that is, until you start to see some blur on the photo. Aperture: This is the amount of light that enters the lens. Adjust the aperture until the image is sharp. Exposure controls Aperture and shutter speed. Flash or No Flash: Flash is great for portraits, but if you don't have a flash, make sure to check your photo before printing. Auto Focus: If you haven't adjusted your auto focus, it might not be sharp enough. Check it first. ISO: The ISO (Indice de Soudéurie), refers to how sensitive the camera is to light. You should use your camera's highest available ISO setting, and adjust it until your photo is sharp. Shooting Mode: This mode tells your camera how to treat the photo, including lighting and color. For example, if you want to shoot in a low light situation, your camera may include the "Scene" mode. Tripod: A tripod is good for a stable shot, but it can also be good for photographing
